

3 Best Performing Hard Drives For Macs To Keep All Your Stuff Saved

Stop. Downloading. So. Much. Stuff! We live in a digital age, so we cannot help it if we want to hoard and keep all knowledge and information we stumble upon online and save it for posterity, no matter how trivial and frivolous it might seem. Problem is, they start to clutter your digital storage space.

Remember, 10% or less of free space on your hard drive can seriously start to limit your machine's performance, and that's something you don't want. To prevent this, you'll need an external hard drive to stuff with all your archives. And if you currently use a MAC, you don't just need an external drive, you'll need the best of them, which is why we got out of our way to provide you with this list, check it out.

The 2 TB G-Drive SSD is the perfect blend of size, speed and security. It's small form factor is perfect for travel shoots and the 2TB SSD gives us enough space for robust 4k footage and with transfer speeds up to 560MB/s it's more than fast enough to edit from. The fact that it's solid state and unlikely to fail when dropped gives us peace of mind that our footage is safe.

The WD Passport has been a significant part of my life for the past 2 years. It has served me very reliably even as it has bounced around in my backpack completely unprotected! As a touring musician who is constantly recording while on the road, I need an external hard drive all the time. Especially considering my Mac's hilariously small 256gb flash drive. I keep all of my songs-in-progress on my hard drive and have never had a problem with files being lost. For any computer with USB 3.0, this is the perfect external hard drive!
