

4 Great Monitors To Put In The Office

I don't know about you, but if I got to put up with insane working hours, inane coworkers, and absolutely delusional bosses, at the very least they better supply me with decent equipment to do my job. And when I mean decent, I mean up-to-date to this year, please.

You might think that's unreasonable, but keep in mind that there are plenty of companies that still use computers equipped with CRT monitors. You know the one with a bulky behind. Humiliating stuff, guys.

Enough. Time to put your foot down and get the order straight to the requisitions department for a decent piece of hardware of your choosing. And when that happens, you better choose the best! You better choose one of these awesome computer monitors for office work.

I like the LG 34WL500 34 ultrawide monitor. It's very affordable and one that's great for dual screens. It has a built-in program that lets you divide your screen in a variety of ways including picture in picture or as many as 8 windows on the monitor.

I typically have the screen split evenly so I can edit photos or write content on one side and drag things over to the other or perform research on the other. There's no shortage of ways to use it but its ideal for anyone who writes content, manages social media, or just needs the ability to work on multiple screens at the same time. It's also one of the cheaper and higher rated large monitors of this size.

The Acer v6 series monitors are a great, cost-effective solution for offices. These monitors are very versatile and come in a few different size and display types, which is an important thing to take into consideration. Although standing desks are popular, keep in mind that they can only accommodate so much space for monitors. Monitors compatible with arms or mounts are also something to check into when looking for new solutions.

The Acer v6 series have adjusting angles and faster response time, which reduces eye strain. Several models have either a blue light filter built in or a reduced amount of blue light content. In addition, they are also very friendly to electric bills with advanced Acer EcoDisplay technologies. These monitors overall are a great solution to an office since they have multiple display types.
